

TRESTLES P.2-8

The pair of trestles by Jules Wabbes was created around 1953. They are made from wood and metal, assembled with special snake-eye screws.

Elegant and delicate, they are nonetheless resistant and build like a small piece of architecture.

The pair is designed to support a wood, a marble or a glass shelf.

SLATTED COAT RACK P.9-15

The Slatted Coat Rack was created quite early in Jules Wabbes's design career, and probably before 1958.

A photograph of such a coat rack shows it was installed in the Foncolin, a large office building in Brussels fully designed and furnished by Wabbes and his collaborators from 1954 to 1958.

SLATTED COAT RACK

Original
drawing, circa 1958.

Jules Wabbes decided to prominently display the coat rack, therefore the coats and hats hung there, instead of hiding the garments in a cupboard. Wabbes's choice to do so wasn't a surprise, rather more of a coherent and radical principle found in his furniture design to make every part visible like the drawer slides of the desks and the joints of his slatted furniture.

The coat rack reminds of a mechanical blind, a screen, a Japanese partition. The movable metallic hooks dance like notes on a music sheet, letting the client create a very nice rhythm with the different hooks. This coat rack was originally sold by the meter: it is again the case today. You can decide to entirely cover the wall of your entrance hall or your cloakroom, like in Wabbes's mansion where the rack covers the wall all the way, even above the door.
